LATEST FASHIONS.

FROM WOMAN'S POINT OF VIEW.

The manufacture of home-made furniture furnishes material for good reading matter, but it is not practical for more than one reason. The average woman has no taste for carpenter's tools, and no experience in handling them, even when she has the necessary time—that is a good and sufficient reason for buying furniture made by other hands.

I have seen a few samples of home-made furniture, and they were nothing over which to wax enthusiastic. In every case the makers had skill in other directions which, put to use, would have brought in enough money to buy substantial furniture. There is the point—do this thing you can do best—and like to do—and earn the money by which to supply needs. It is better than spreading one's efforts over a wide surface.

I believe in special training which insures a living and a hobby which may add to one's income, or be pursued for pleasure only. There is a man who, with his wife, runs a lodging house which enables the family to be comfortable. His father owns a farm, and has an extensive supply of honey, a part of which is shipped to the son, and gives him spending money and a change of scene, because he travels through the reachable summer districts with his honey and the most delicious potato chips I ever tasted. These he cooks himself, and both bring top-notch prices.

There are his living and his hobby, both on a paying basis. It is well enough to know how to make frocks and trim hats, particularly if one's income is small. The skill to make repairs wherever they are needed is a valuable asset, but the average housewife has quite enough to do to make home livable without spending time in unnecessary work. It is better to buy second-hand furniture and renovate it than to spend time at the making of new, which is a trade learned through a long apprenticeship.

I know women who paper rooms and paint anything, and they have fresh, sweet homes. This comes in the line of renovation, and is a pleasurable pursuit, but we would not all care to spend our spare moments in this fashion—some of us like lighter forms of work, and a few of us prefer intervals of rest to a round of labor. One woman of my acquaintance regrets her ability to do so many kinds of tasks—she says that she is expected to perform them whether she wants to or not, and that despite the fact that her husband is not a poor man.

Waist Bows the Vogue.

Waist bows are the really conspicuous trifle at the present moment, but these, to be fashionable, must be odd, and may be really queer without in the least detracting from their fashionable quality. Some are very large and butterfly-shaped, with wings of close or loose side plaits; but all are crossed stiffly in the center. They are attached at the middle of the waist line at the back, or at the side, especially in the latter position, when the waist is draped in the one-sided manner which just now many affect.

MORNING CHIT-CHAT.

TO be able to give gracefully is a rather unusual talent. But to be able to receive gracefully is an infinitely rarer one. The childish and prolonged squabbles we hear so often in street cars over the payment of fares are an excellent example of the ability of many of us to accept a favor simply and gracefully.

To protest and make much fuss and feathers about receiving a favor seems to be the popular idea of gratitude.

As a matter of fact, it is extremely bad taste to protest a favor that you know in your heart you will accept in the end. Accept promptly and simply. Say "Thank you" in the prettiest and most gracious way that you know how, but with as little fuss and feathers as possible, and you honor your benefactor far more than by going through a rigamarole of protest.

I had the pleasure of meeting the other day a well-known woman of whose brilliance and charm I had long heard, and the thing which impressed me about her, even more than her witty conversation and her beauty, was the perfect graciousness and simplicity with which she accepted it when another member of the party offered her a more comfortable chair.

There is, of course, such a thing as the self-worship which accepts all favors simply and unprotestingly just because it looks upon them as tribute due.

But I do not mean that kind of simplicity. I mean the kind that seems to say, "You wish to do me a kindness. I thank you. I will try to honor you by accepting it as graciously as you give it, and some day I shall hope to have my turn at being donor."

The blessedness of giving is not a moral fiction. It is a live fact. To balk it by any ungenerous reception is selfishness, therefore.

I once knew a girl who for many years received an unusually good salary as a stenographer and had been lavishly generous with her earnings, doing good in every direction, and enjoying to the full the blessedness of giving. Reverses came to her. Her health gave way, and she had to give up her position and go back to her home in the country.

Some of her friends and office mates, thinking it was a good opportunity to do by her as she had done by others, got together and made up a purse which they planned to give to her on her departure.

And she who had been indulging for years in the joy of giving refused to help others to do the same happiness.

She indignantly refused the purse, saying that when she needed charity she would ask for it.

For, like many others, though pastmistress in the art of gracious giving, she did not know the A, B, C of the art of receiving.

Just as it is far easier to look down upon any one with dignity than to look up and still be dignified, so it is far easier to give with graciousness than to receive.

But as he who has the true dignity may maintain it, no matter how often the accident of height forces him to look up, so he who has the true graciousness may maintain it no matter how constantly the accident of position and possessions forces him to give rather than to receive.

MADE GYPSIES' KING

Brawny Nomad Is Crowned by Five Tribesmen.

CEREMONY UNIQUE BUT SIMPLE

Big Wanderer Walks Into Law Office and Signs Paper in Which He Vows to Protect His 500,000 Subjects Scattered in All Parts of the United States of America.

Washington was the coronation place of a king yesterday.

Emil Mitchell, a brawny nomad of fifty, was solemnly installed king of all the gypsies of the United States in the law offices of Britton, Gray & Brown, 1419 F street northwest. Five tribal chiefs were present.

Several months ago Zlatcho Domite, who has been king for the last five years, crossed into Canada and resigned his job as ruler. The gypsies throughout the country, through their tribal chiefs, decided on Mitchell as the new king in a convention held in Louisiana.

Wanders Through Forest.

Mitchell is from Louisiana, and has been wandering through the forests and fields between here and there for the last month on his way to the Capital for his coronation.

The ceremony was a simple one. The big nomad walked into the law office and signed a paper, wherein he vowed to protect the interests of his subjects, and wherein they were to pay him the regular amount of tribute.

Mitchell had several members of his family with him, and immediately after the ceremony he went with them to the gypsy camp outside the city, and made merry.

The following is the paper certifying the election of the new king:

"Know all gypsies by these presents, that we, Wasso Mitchell, Eli John, John Williams, Steve Miguel, and Mitchell George, representing all the tribes of the gypsies of the United States, duly appointed under the customs, rules, and laws of the gypsy tribes and of the United States, as representatives of said tribes, do appoint, elect, and constitute Emil Mitchell, of the city of New Orleans, chief of all the gypsies of the United States, with authority to do and perform all things and acts pertaining to the said office that he may lawfully do under the rules, customs, and laws of the gypsy people and not in conflict with the laws of the United States or any sovereign State."

Subjects Number 500,000.

King Mitchell is one of the most opulent kings of the nomadic world. His subjects number about 500,000, and pay regular tribute to him each year. The form of government is exactly like that of the nomadic tribes of the north of Africa. Each tribe has a chief, and is given a certain territory to cover. Tribute is exacted according to the size of territory.

The national king has in turn to pay his respects to the great international king who resides in Hungary.

None of the five tribesmen nor the king-elect knew how to read, and simply put their marks to the papers to be signed.

Seal Put on Paper.

After this had been done the king wanted to get some means by which his authority would be recognized in any part of the United States. The notary, R. W. Snow, who drew up the instrument, took him to the Department of Justice, where a seal was affixed to the royal instrument.

The new king will leave the vicinity of Washington this afternoon with his royal caravan. His majesty will go North as far as Chicago, where the royal party will encamp and await the further pleasure of the king.

LADIES' SHIRTTWAIST. Paris Pattern No. 3327

All Seams Allowed.

The lingerie shirrtwaist is the favorite for wear with separate skirts, and one needs so many of them that a variety of designs is essential. We illustrate a charming model, especially suited to batiste or lawn, although other fabrics, such as pongee, taffeta, gingham, percale, madras and the like may also be utilized. Front and back of this waist have the Gibson tuck at the shoulders, and this seems to form a frame for other tucks, which add to the dressiness and substance of the waist. In front there is a group of short tucks and another of full length ones between the shoulder and the closing band. This last is arranged for studs, but buttons serve as well. In the back there is a central box plait, which is quite small, and on each side of it there is a group of little tucks which reach from shoulder to waistline. The sleeves of this waist have a puff, which extends below the elbow, and here joins a deep cuff, which may be omitted if desired. In some cases a dressy effect is obtained by making the cuff of embroidery or lace. The pattern is in 4 sizes—32 to 42 inches bust measure. Size 36 bust required 2 3/4 yards of material 36 inches wide.
